

Privacy

Your personal health care information will be shared with health care providers in order to ensure the delivery of safe, effective, and quality care. All providers have comprehensive policies related to the confidentiality of client information.

In the event of a disaster, in order to prioritize Vancouver Coastal Health's disaster response, your health care information may be shared with health care providers involved with disaster response.

From time to time, in some areas, you may be asked to participate in a Home Support Quality Improvement Survey. Your willingness to participate is voluntary and all responses will remain confidential. Your feedback will help us improve the quality of home support services you receive.

What is Home Support?

Home Support Services

Richmond and Vancouver

What Is Home Support?

Home Support Services help people with on-going health conditions to remain in their homes and to be as independent and safe as possible. These services cannot replace the support from family, friends or community organizations but rather add to or supplement it. Support and relief for primary caregivers is also available.

There are a number of programs available through Home Support Services. Some charge a service fee based on your income.

Short Term and Convalescent Service

To help for a short time until you become healthy and independent again (e.g. after being hospitalized or after surgery).

Long Term Service

To help with on-going illness or disability.

Palliative Service

To support and care for those with a terminal illness and limited ability to manage their care.

How Do I Get Home Support?

The first step is to place a call to Central Intake at your local Community Health Centre/Continuing Health Services Office, or speak to the hospital social worker or Transitional Service Team member if you are in hospital. They will arrange for a health care professional to work with you and your family to help plan for your care and determine your eligibility for home support. If eligible, they will also arrange for a home support provider to meet with you. The home support provider will set up a schedule for a Community Health Worker to assist you in your home. Community Health Workers may work for an independent agency or the health authority depending on where you live.

A health professional will continue to see you to assess your on-going need for support, and help plan for changes in your care.

What Do Community Health Workers Do?

Community Health Workers have the experience and training to help you with:

- Getting out of bed and dressed
- Grooming and personal hygiene – washing, brushing hair, cleaning teeth, etc.
- Bathing and using the toilet
- Getting ready for and going to bed
- Taking medications
- Doing special exercises
- Relief for primary caregiver
- Other care tasks as required

The Home Support Provider

- Works with you to set up your schedule with a Community Health Worker.
- Answers your questions and looks into problems you may have with the home support.
- Supports and supervises the Community Health Worker.
- Talks about any change in your health needs with your health professionals.
- Bills you for any assessed home support service fee.

Making Home Support A Success

- Be at home when your Community Health Worker is expected. If you cannot be home, call the home support provider as soon as possible.
- If you miss an appointment without canceling with sufficient notice, you will still be charged your service fee.
- If the worker does not come when expected, call the home support representative.
- Tell the home support provider if there are any problems with your home support, or if you are especially pleased with the service.
- Ensure you have the supplies and equipment the Community Health Worker needs.
- Call your local Community Health Centre/Continuing Health Services Office:

- if your care needs change; or
- if there are on-going problems with your home support
- if you do not agree with the care and support you have been offered

If you have concerns about the quality of home support services that you haven't been able to resolve with the agency or Community Health Centre/ Continuing Health Services Office, you can call the Vancouver Coastal Health Patient Care Quality Office at: 1-877-993-9199.

Mutual Respect & Safety

All Community Health Workers are trained and supervised. Some may come from a different background than you do, but they know how to do their job. It is against the law in British Columbia to treat someone unfairly because of their gender, race, ethnic, religious background, sexual orientation, or because of any group they belong to. Clients, staff and Community Health Workers must treat each other with respect.

Your home will be the Community Health Workers workplace. All worksites are required to comply with WorkSafe BC regulations, which restrict employees to provide home support care only when it can be done safely and respectfully.
